Excerpt from A Treatise on Ropemaking, as Practised in Private and Public Ropeways: With a Description of the Manufacture, Rules, Tables of Weights, Etc., Adapted to the Trade, Shipping, Mining, Railways, Builders, C It must be allowed that among the many arts necessary to navigation, one on which the safety of the ship depends for the security of sails, masts and yards, and consequently the hull, and lives of the passengers and crew, is the manu facture of cordage, used as tow-lines, rigging, running gear, c. But it has often happened, that where no expense has been spared, the best material selected, and the greatest care taken in its manufacture, that when it is placed in the hands Of the fitter, rigger, or sailor, oftentimes the properties of the rope are destroyed, and the blame put upon the manufacturer; I speak this from experience, having been employed in all the branches as ropemaker, sailor, and rigger, many years. I at one time made the cordage for the outfit of a ship of 600 tons. I knew the materials to have been the best, and...
